Workplace Q&A for English Speakers

Working in Japan is a novel experience. Some practices in your workplace that you find different from working in your own country could be put down to disparities in the culture or working environment, but in some cases these oddities may actually be your boss exploiting you in violation of employment laws and regulations. Knowing what's okay and what's not should help you better navigate the Japanese world of work.

This seminar seeks to answer real questions and issues that workers actually have in their daily working lives. Is it okay for my boss to have me come to work 5 minutes early every morning without pay? Do I have to comply if he wants to make me an independent contractor for the same work that I've been doing? Send in your questions for lively discussion with our lecturer and your fellow participants. Learn and share with your colleagues to work better!
